Three considerations when choosing a service:

Length How long do you want this to be? Will you read it live or publish it? (Page length as well as expected speech times are included underneath word counts for reference). If you are having trouble deciding, you may give your best guess and communicate your preferred budget to the writer, and we will send a survey that will help you determine both length and content.

Timeline How quickly do I need this done? Please consider: the clock starts after the writer receives the completed questionnaire or after the interview. We will send a draft within the agreed time frame and you can ask for edits, at which point we will make reasonable edits within 24 hours.

Writer - Client Communication Would I prefer to answer questions on a customized questionnaire (sent via email) or during a live conversation? If I prefer an interview, do I prefer talking via phone or video conference? Some clients like the low-pressure questionnaire, because they can pause and think about the questions. Others would prefer not to write or type, and would rather talk on the phone. Some prefer to see the writer face-to-face over a video conference. All are great ways for our writers to gather the necessary information, so just choose what feels most comfortable to you. Tip: Most devices have voice-to-text capabilities, so you can even dictate the answers to the questionnaire.
